This is the previous seller's note:

When we purchased the home in 2014 the west and north foundation walls had some cracking and bowing. We placed steel beams along those two walls to prevent any further issues and sprayed foundation walls with Polyurea for further water protection. Some water has gotten into the basement along the north wall - by base of staircase. This has happened twice that we recall with excessive rainfall since we've owned the property, in a small amount isolated to that area, and has not happened since we placed larger gutters.

When we purchased the home there was a 24v wiring system. In 2014 this was replaced, and all new wiring was run throughout by the homeowner. The house was completely gutted and remodeled at that time, with exterior walls sprayfoamed for insulation. New double pane windows including double hung, picture, and patio slider were installed. The only windows that were not replaced were those in the northeast corner of the living room. They were sealed with silicone and caulking.

The garage was built in 2017. Along the west wall it may get water with heavy rain.

There are property pins that mark out the property lines buried in the ground and can be found with a metal detector.

↳ French drain installed in 2016 has helped this issue but still gets a little in west corner.

→ Sellers Note: 6/8/26 -

We have only had water in this space one other time, which was last week when we had extremely heavy rain in a short amount of time. One of our children noticed a wet carpet square in closet under stairs. Pulled carpet square up in closet and saw no standing water but there was a damp spot on concrete. This is the only time we have noticed moisture under the stairs + our kids play in that area often.
